

Greek Temple

The Ancient Greeks were very religious people and built many beautiful temples. They were built to house a statue and to offer thanksgiving to the patron deity of the city.

Temples were built from limestone or marble and had roofs made of wood. The roof tiles were made of terracotta or stone.

Temples were the place people prayed and offer sacrifices to the Gods. People would bring wine or even live animals to be sacrificed. The meat from the sacrifice was given out to the worshippers and the bones and skin burnt.
