

Aztec Temple

Aztec temples weren't just a place for worship the Aztecs believed that they were the homes of their Gods. The temples were usually found at the top of a pyramid and were a focal point for festivities and sacrifice. They were located within the city and were an integral part of the city, unlike the Egyptian pyramids which were used as tombs for their kings.

Aztec people believed that they lived in the era of the fifth sun and that any day the world could end. In order to postpone this and appease their Gods they performed sacrifice of animals, objects and humans.
